Expect the first time you use this application will be a trial run.

Before you begin, confirm that the sound preferences are correctly set.

At the top of the screen, select the Apple

Select System Preferences > Sound

Select the Input tab.
Confirm Soundflower (2ch) is selected.

Use headphones. Select the Output tab. Confirm headphones is selected.

Open the browser and display the video. If possible, set the start point a few seconds before the start point of what you want to capture. Use the left and right arrow keys on the keyboard to advance in small increments.

Open Replay Video Capture from the Applications folder. If the browser blocks it, click and drag to move the browser or Replay. Replay should sit on top of the browser. Make the video as large on screen as you need; do not select full screen if the display deteriorates. For example, use Theatre mode in YouTube.
Select Region. Outline the video window; see illustration below. Review the options to set time for length of video to capture and the Delay Start in seconds. Adjust as necessary.

Replay is a screen recording application. Before you begin capturing, confirm that the region does not include the play/pause buttons and the mouse.

Press the red record button in Replay and then press Play to start playing the video [take notice of the location of the mouse; move it out of the region. NOTE: volume output lowers during recording

See the top right of the desktop. As the video records, the time displays. Press the red record button to stop. The button turns black when the recording stops. Click the black button for more options.

The video is listed in the Replay window. A QuickTime movie [.mov] file is created. It is saved in the Movies > Replay Video Capture folder. Review the video. If there is no sound plug-in headphones, return to the Apple menu > System preferences > Sound. Select Output > Headphones. Options for trimming the video are available in Replay and other video editing applications.
